

March 24, 1950.

Dr. David M. Bonner,
Osborn Botanical Laboratory,
Yale University,
New Haven, Connecticut.

Dear Dave:

The sense of something undone has been bothering me for a few days, and I just remembered what it was, viz., the paper that we were planning to write jointly on the logical content of gene-enzyme relationships. Looking to the file, I found a letter from you dated January 6, in which you mentioned that you were writing Bentley Glass, and preparing a broad outline. Frankly, I just haven't given this project any thought at all, because I more or less pigeonholed it to wait for your reply. Do you feel that it might still be worthwhile? If you want to follow up with an outline such as you mentioned, I think we can take it up again.

Hoping to hear from you,

Sincerely,

Joshua Lederberg